THE END!

The "OTHER WOMAN!"

THE MINUTE SCHOOL was over, Prissy gathered up her books and started straight for the bench. Of course there were other benches on the campus, but this particular bench belonged to her and Don! That was where Don had first told her she was the prettiest girl in the class. That was where he had asked her out on their first date. And that was the bench at which they'd met ever after!

Prissy was a bit earlier than usual, since class had been let out a few minutes before schedule. Humming, she made her way to the bench, thinking to surprise Don by leaving an offering of fudge on the seat and hiding behind a nearby tree to see him discover it.

But it was Prissy who got the surprise instead! For, as she approached the bench, she could hear Don's voice, followed by a soft feminine giggle.

"Do you really like it?" Don was asking.

"I think it's adorable!" The feminine voice replied.

"Why don't you put it on so I can see how it looks," Don said.

"Why, of course, Donnie!"

If it weren't for the undeniable fact that she was standing right there and seeing it with her own eyes, Prissy would never have believed it. There they were, Don and that conceited Violet Allenby! And Don was slipping a bracelet on Violet's wrist and Violet was helping him fasten it.

"Oh, Donnie, I love it!" Violet exclaimed, flashing the bracelet in the sun. "You are sweet and thoughtful!"

"I'm glad you think so, Violet!" Prissy said coldly, facing both of them. "And since Don seems to think you're pretty special, I guess you two want to be left alone!" Turning on her heel, she walked off quickly, so that they would not see the tears in her eyes.

"Prissy! Prissy!" Don called after her. But instead of turning back Prissy began to run... faster and faster... away from them! To think she'd been planning to come earlier and give Don some of her fudge. Why, she'd gotten up hours before school-time to make it! And now, it was just a sticky mess, clenched in her fist!

Well, everything was a mess! Violet Allenby had been making eyes at Don for a long time now, and at last she'd won him away! Slamming into her house, Prissy gave vent to the tears of shame and unhappiness that welled up within her.

"Priscilla!" That was mother, calling from the hall downstairs.

"There's someone to see you!"

"Tell him to go away!" moaned Prissy. "I won't talk to him!"

"But it's Henrietta Bigelow!" her mother called back.

"Please come down," Henrietta shouted. "I've got something to tell you!"

Her eyes red and swollen with crying, Prissy came down the steps. Henrietta didn't wait to burble the news. "I was there all the time," she said. "Right behind the campus fountain! And I heard Don telling Violet he'd bought you a present but he wasn't sure you'd like it so he wanted her to look at it and tell him it if was pretty enough for you and she tried it on and... where are you going?"

"To make a phone call!" Prissy yelled gleefully.

A WISEGUY named JOE

SOME OF THE kids thought Joe Billings was pretty smart, but I guess that all depends on what "smart" means. You see, Joe was the kind of fellow that was always figuring out angles on things...the easiest way to get out of doing something he was supposed to do, or better still, a way to get somebody else to do it for him. Providing he got the credit, of course!

Usually, Joe liked to brag about his little schemes, but here's one he never talks about. That's because it didn't work out quite the way he had figured it!

Sheila Barron was the cutest girl in the class and very popular. When a guy wanted a date with her, he had to ask a long time in advance or get crushed in the competition. It took someone like Joe to boast to a few of the boys that he could get a date with Sheila for Friday night. And Friday was only three days off!

"Bet'cha ya can't!" Walt Morris said.

"It's a bet!" Joe smiled. "Week's allowance?"

Naturally, Joe had an angle worked out in his mind and he went into action right after the bet was made. He sought out Burt Rollins, who often went out with Sheila, and told him, "Hey, there's gonna be a very tough history exam on Monday! They're gonna spring it as a surprise, but I hear it might even be counted as our final exam!"

"Who ya kiddin'?" Burt asked. Joe maintained a troubled face and a sincere air. Burt was convinced.

In a short time, the rumor was flying all over the place. Burt told his friends and they told their friends! Joe knew his scheme was working when the rumor came back to him. "All the kids are starting to cram," he was warned. "You'd better get busy with the history books, Joe, 'cause this is gonna be one tough exam!"

Then Joe called Sheila. "Hiya, cutie-pie!" he said. "How's about makin' a movie with me this Friday night? Or are you all dated up?"

"I was," Sheila admitted ruefully, "but I'm not any more. Seems there's going to be a big exam on Monday and everybody's cramming for it! No dates at all this weekend!"

Joe's voice grew confident. "Take it from me," he said, "there's nothing to worry about! You don't have to study! I'll pick you up at eight...okay?"

"Sorry," Sheila said, "but I'm studying, too!" And she hung up!

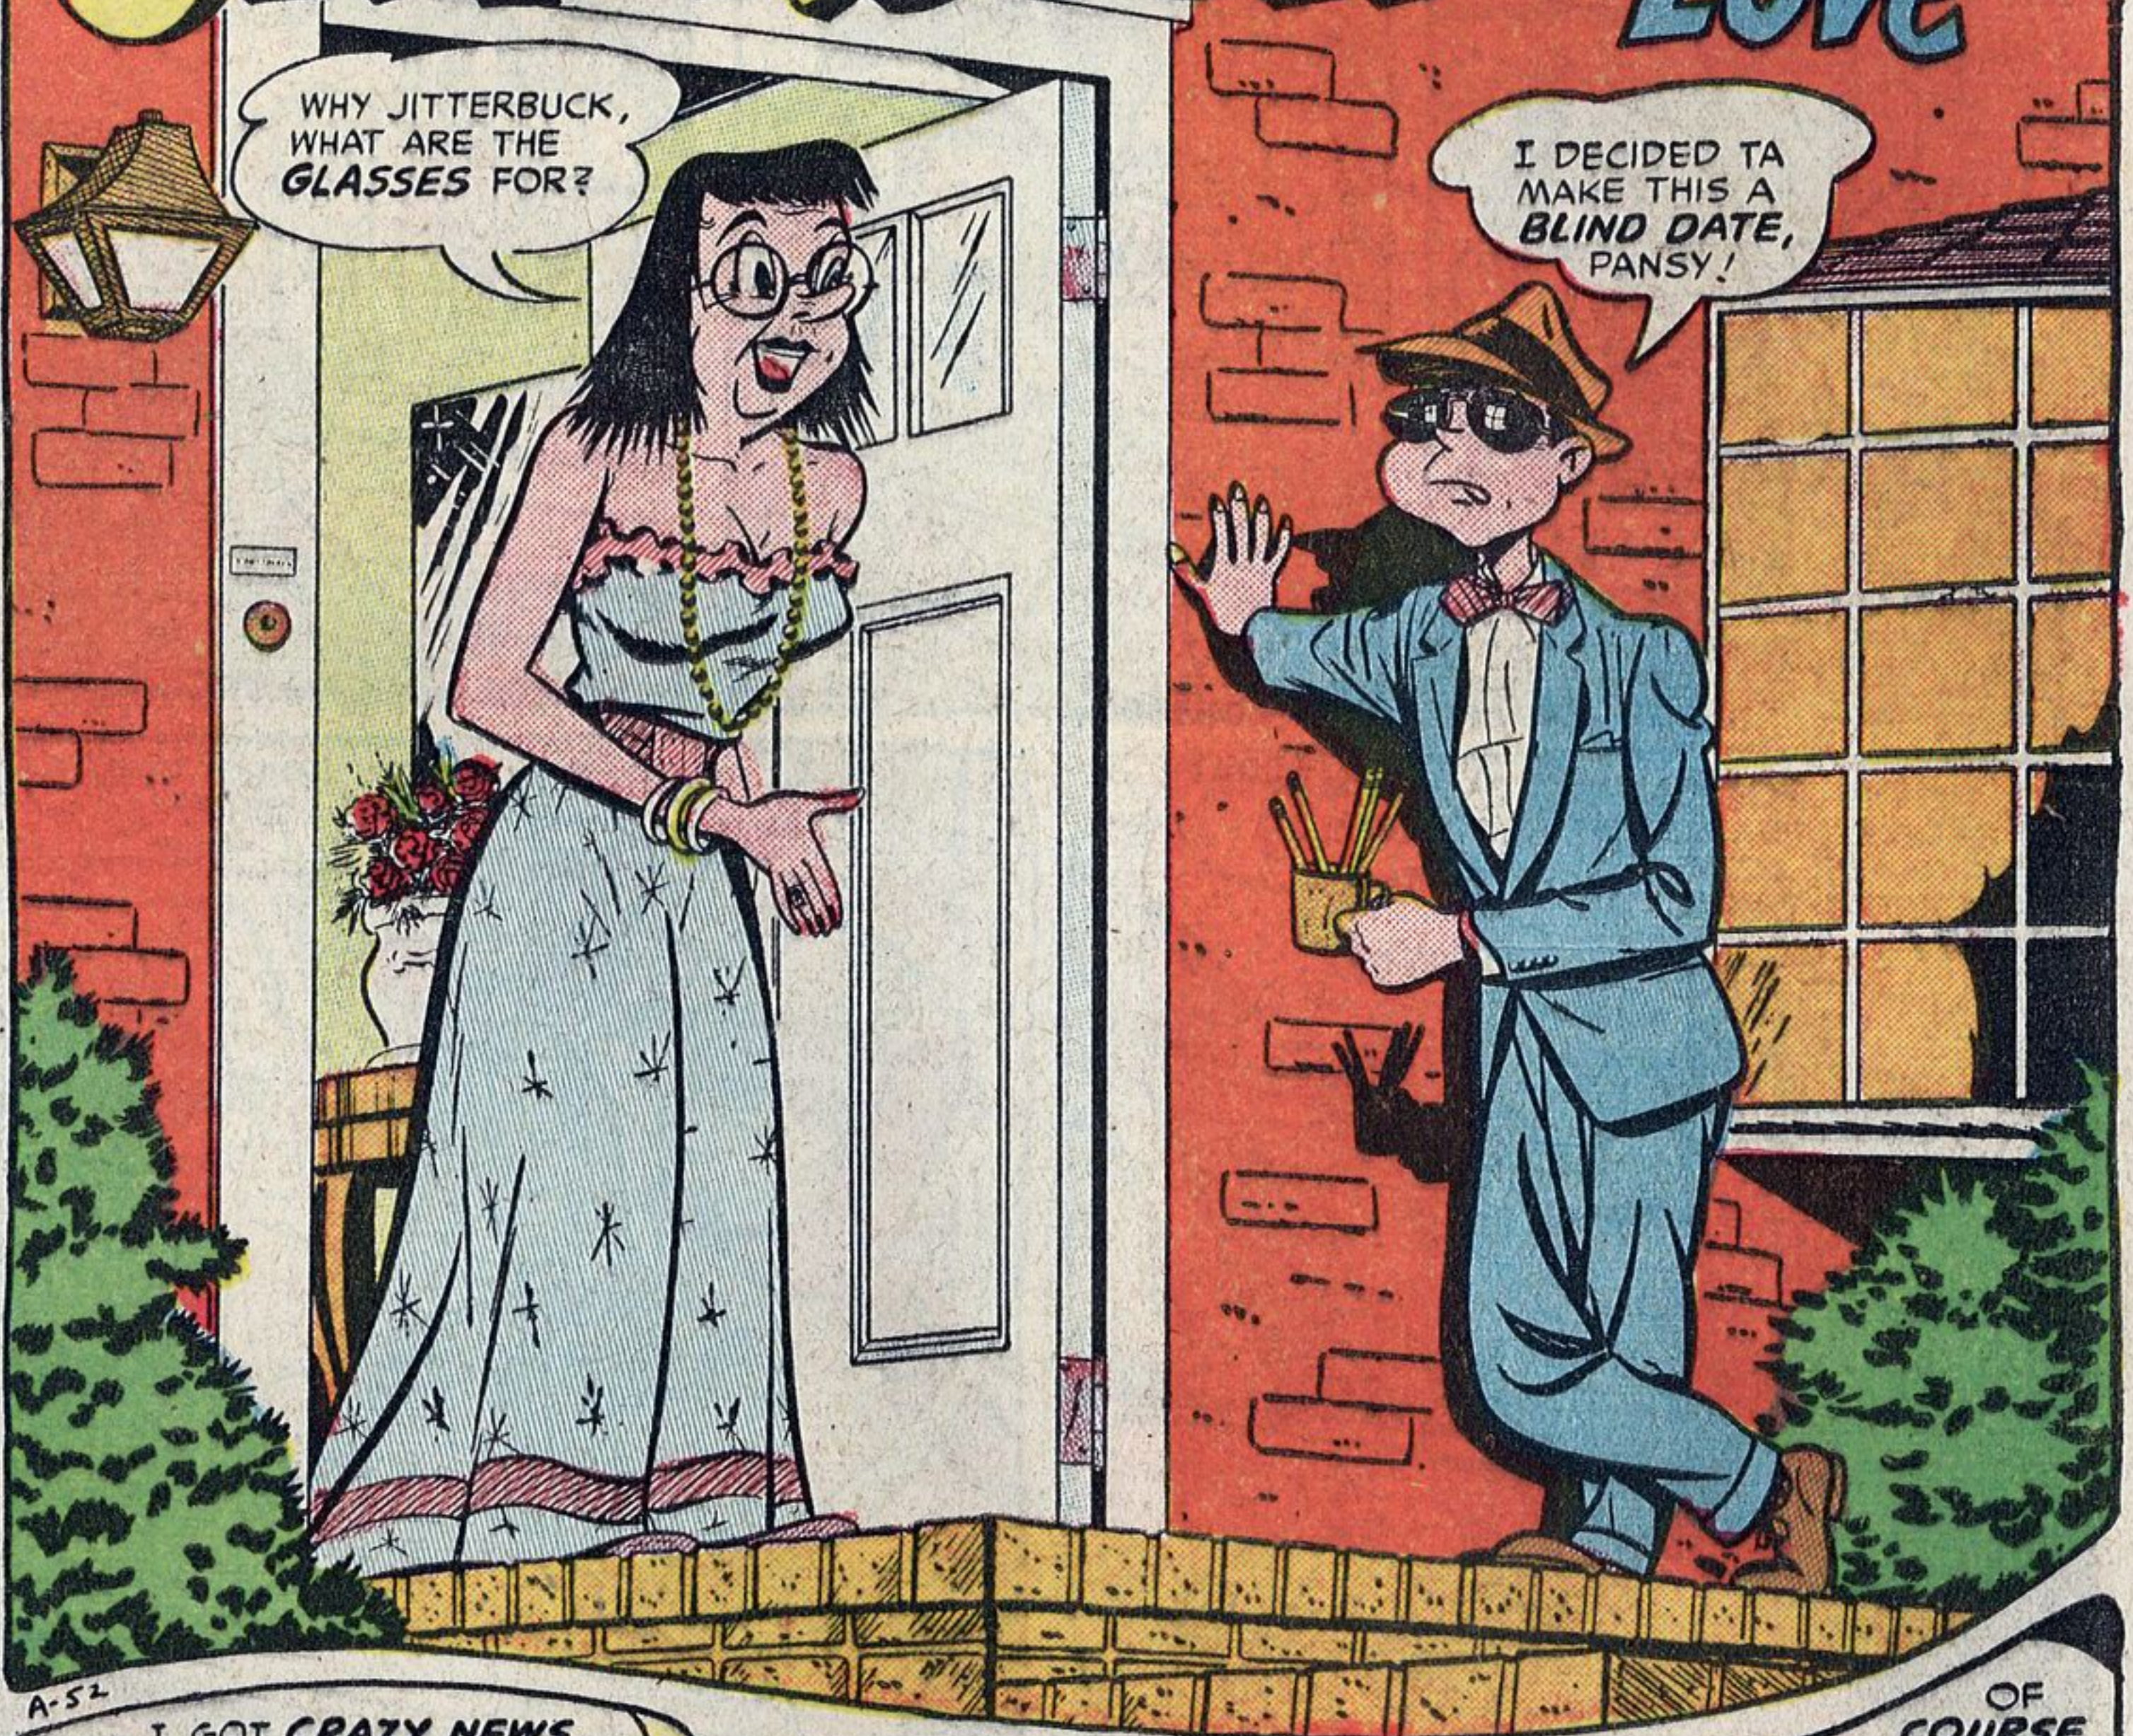

That was something Joe hadn't counted on at all! All alone, he faced a friendless weekend, going to the movies by himself, losing his bet and his allowance! The rest of the weekend, while everyone crammed, Joe tried to figure out some way of getting out of paying Walt Morris.

Still, he had many a secret laugh at all the poor simps chained to their books for nothing. "Will they feel dopey when there isn't any exam!" he thought.

His laugh lasted until Monday morning. "Good morning," said the history prof gravely, "you may all put your books away and see that your fountain pens are filled. I hope you'll all be a credit to me on this examination! If you are ready, class..."

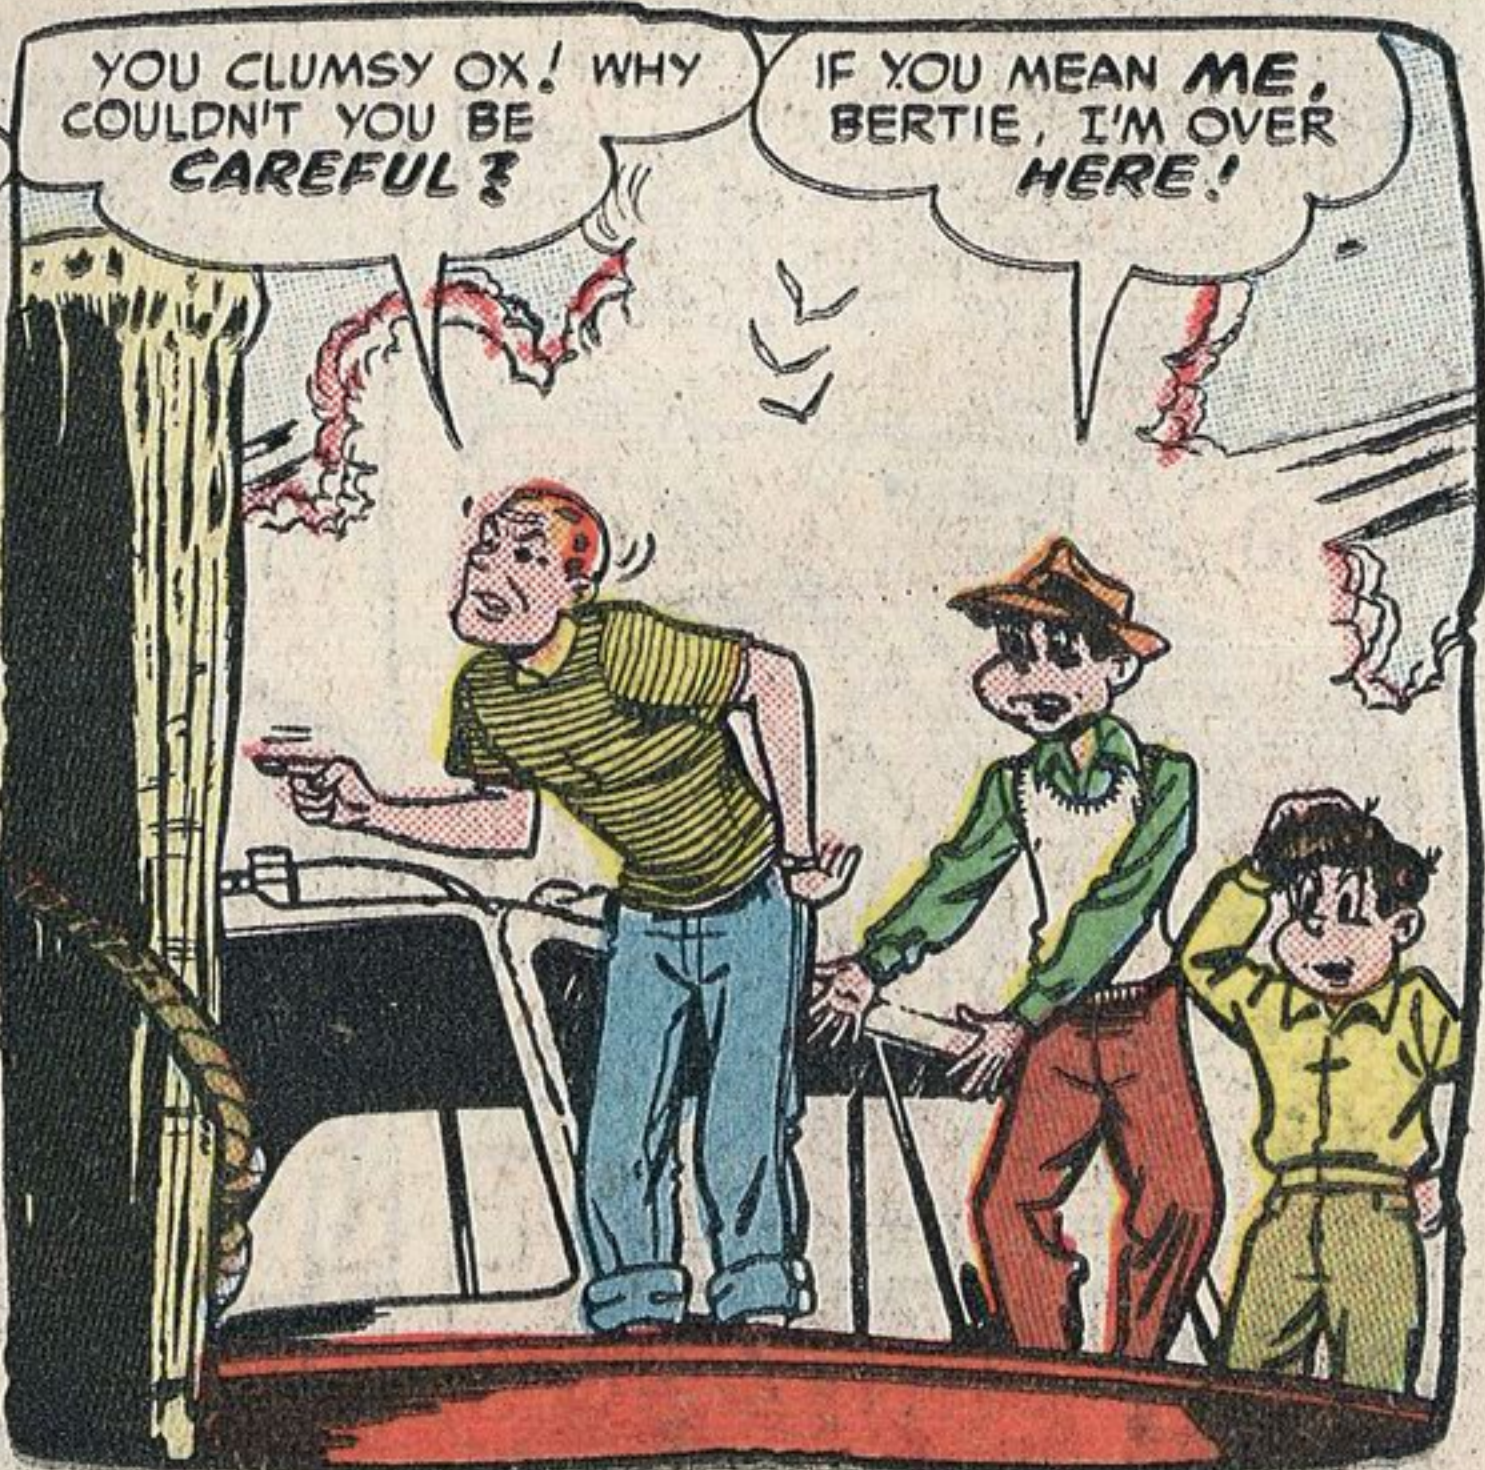

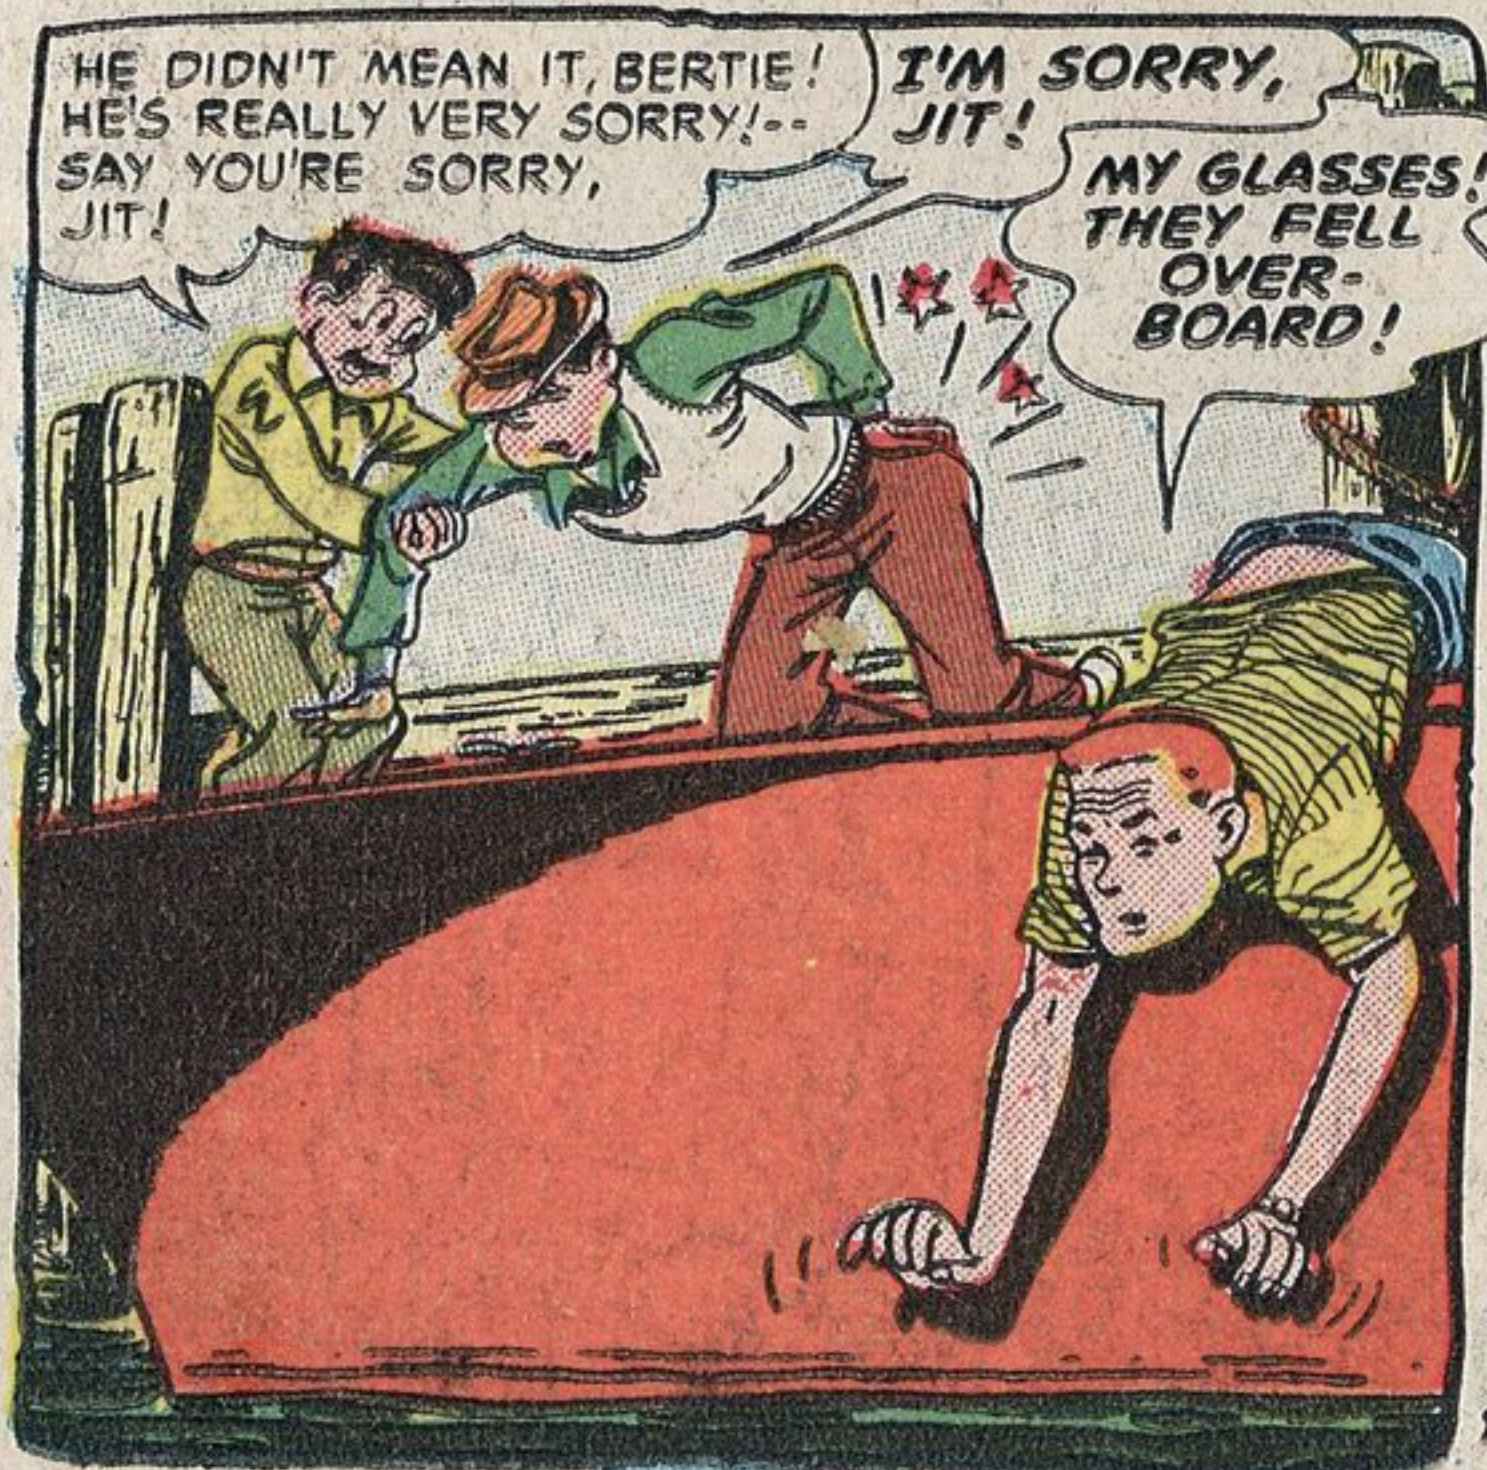

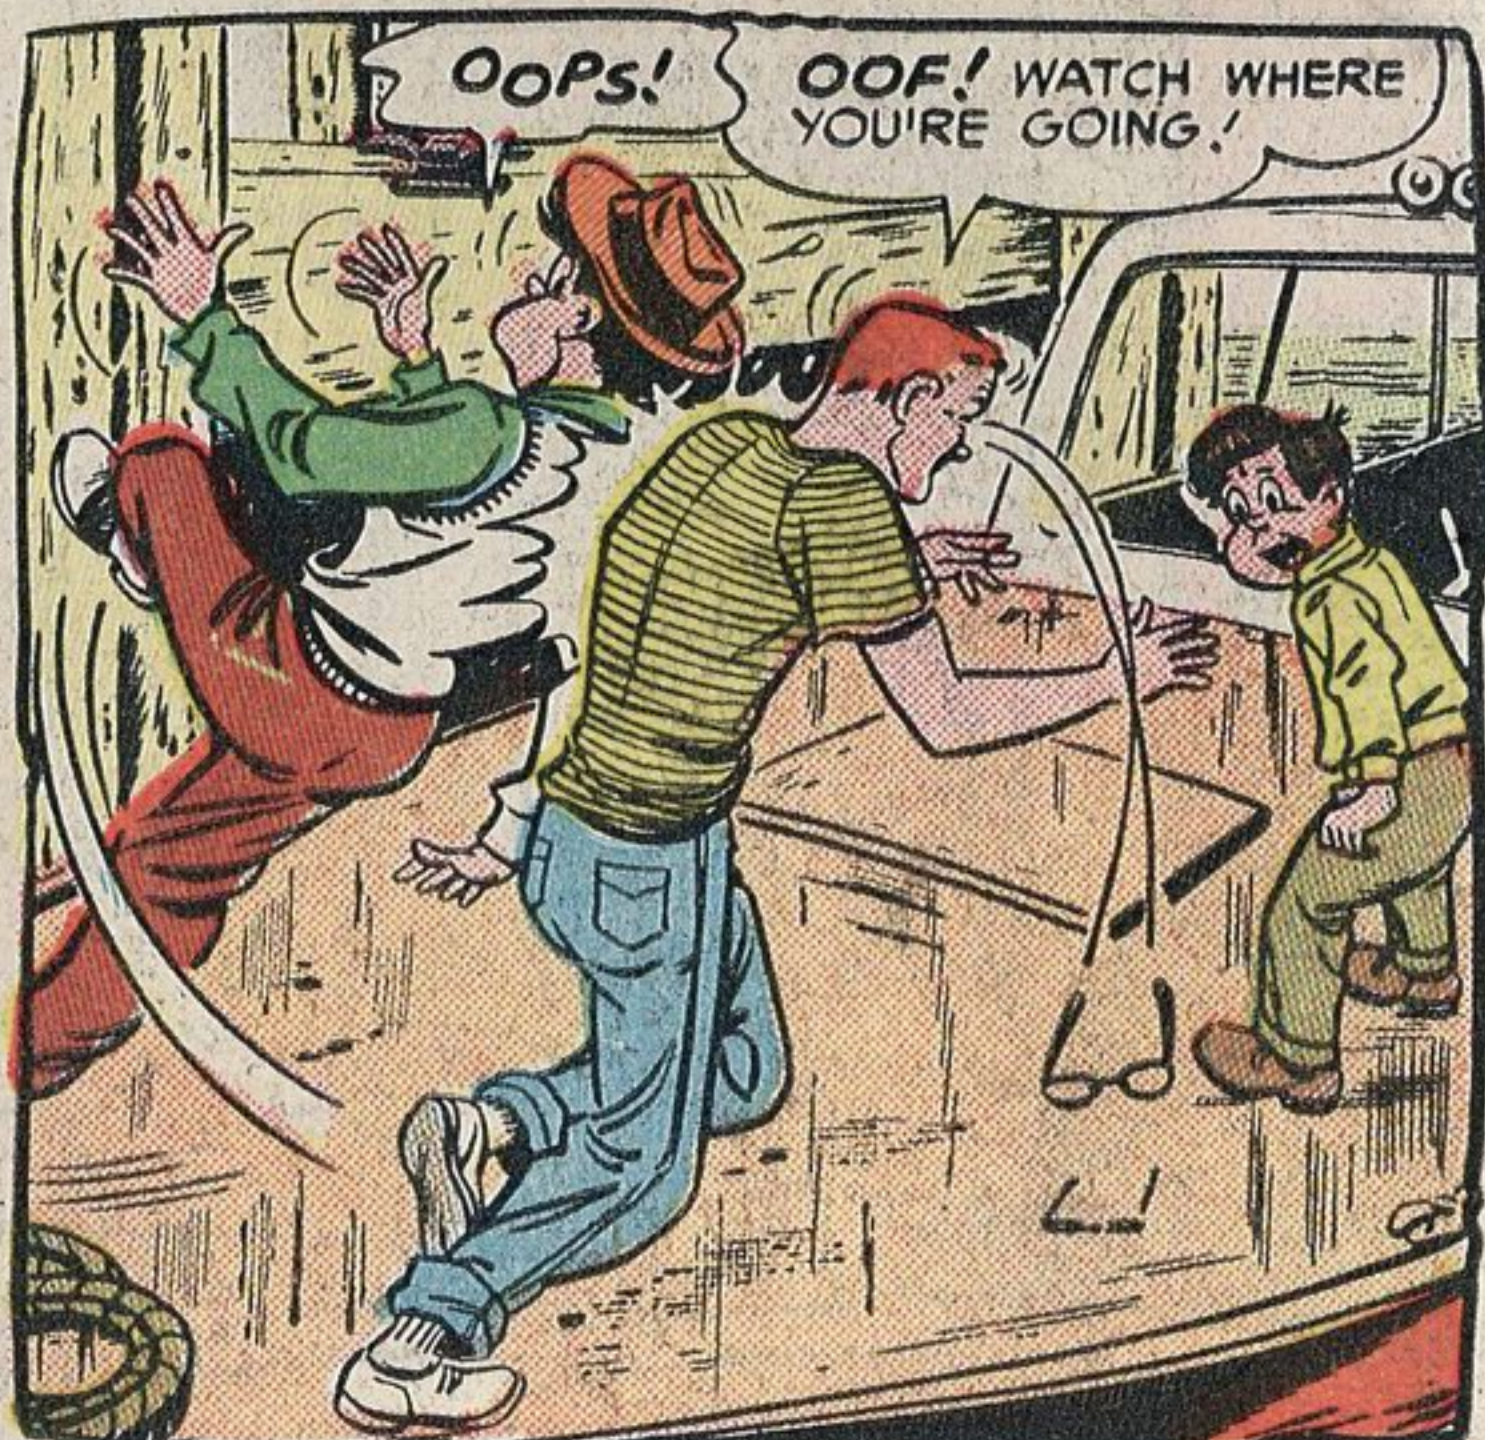

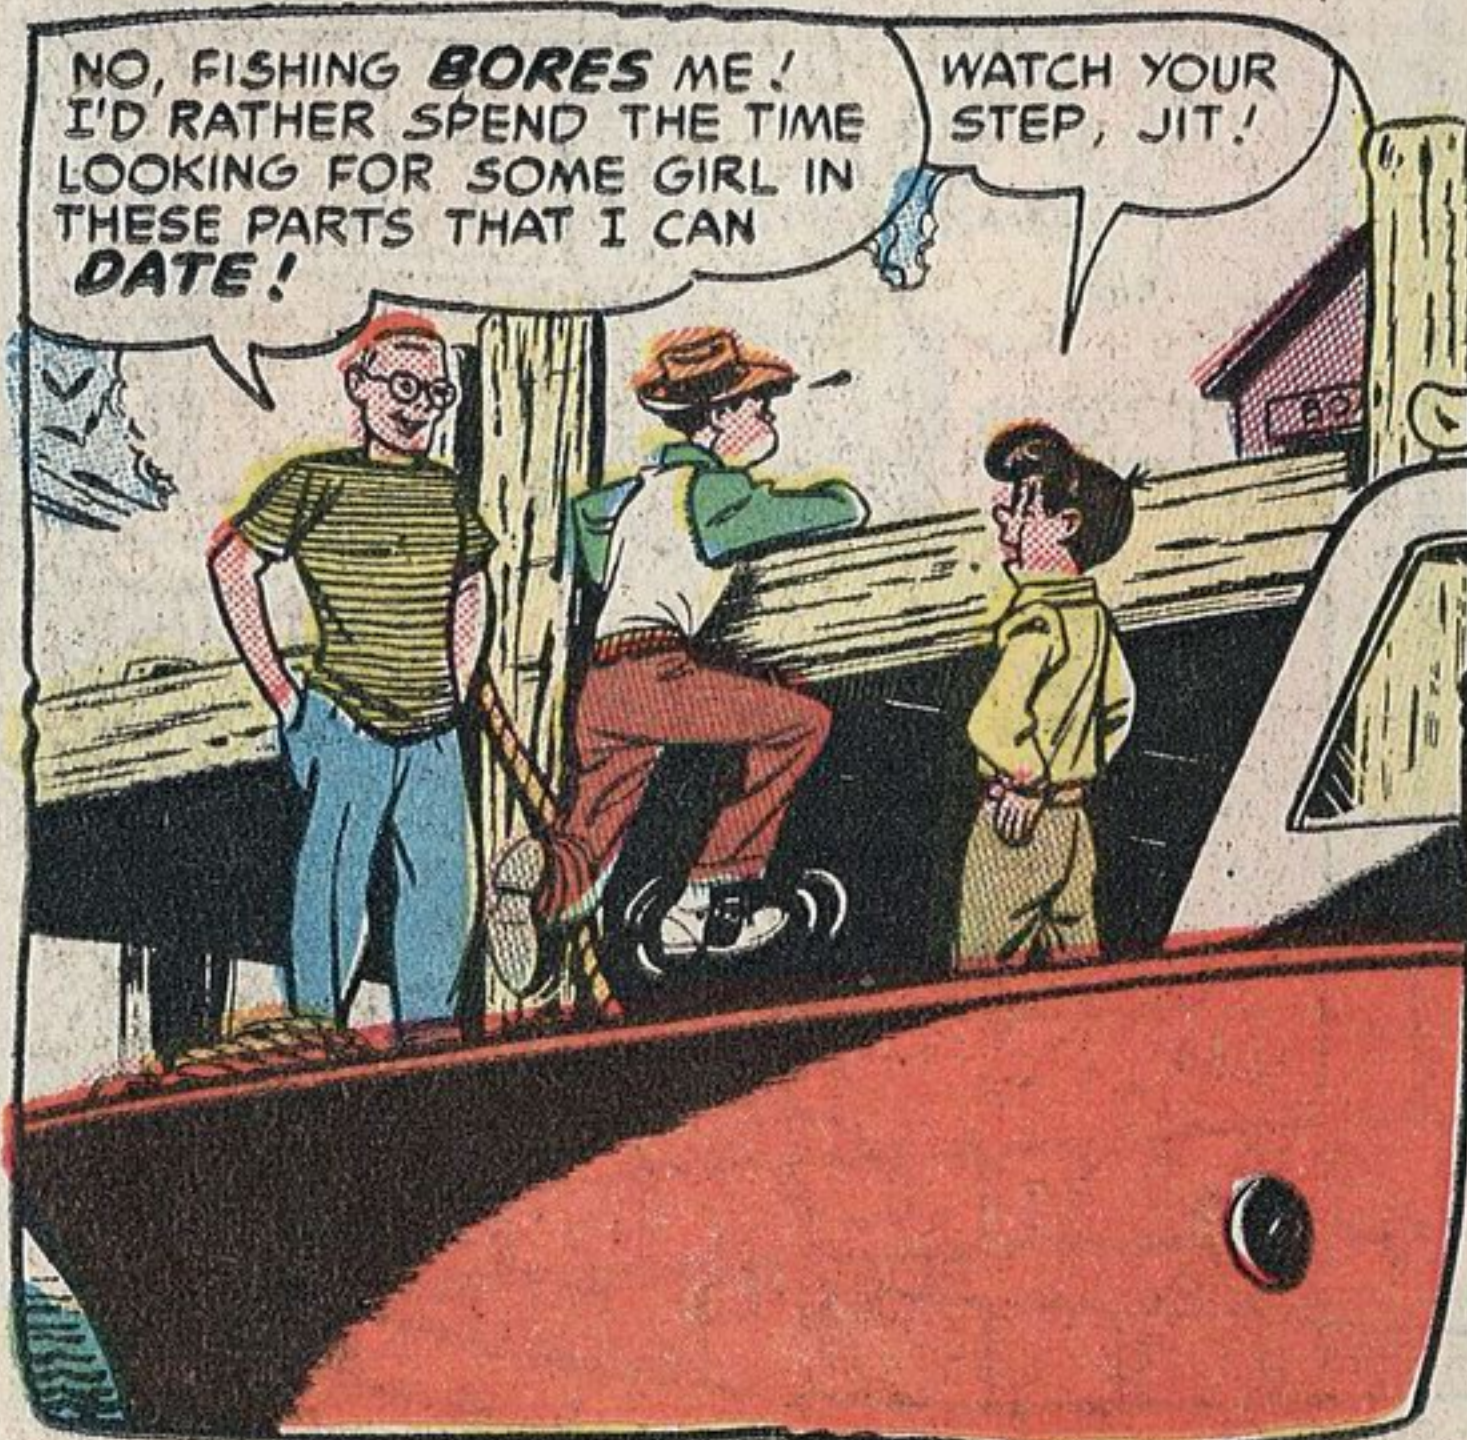

It's a funny thing. Everyone was a credit to the history prof! The whole class passed with flying honors except...a wise-guy named Joe!
